A STORY OF TWO WIGS.

[From the New York Times.]

The opinions of the old differ as to many things from the opinions of the young, and there is not a man living of sixty years of age who will not frankly admit that old men are always right.
Take, for example, the subject of the wig in the back parlor. The elderly man believes it is designated to assist him in playing whist, while the young man thinks it is meant to be turned down very low, so that the "dim religious light," that Milton said that no back parlor should be without, may calm the mind of the young lady of the house and fit her to listen to the high and holy themes. Of course, the elderly man is right. His is the wisdom of experience.
He has once been young, and has known what it is to fall over a chair or to upset the table while hurriedly turning up the gas in consequence of an alarm of an approaching father in the front hall, or of a prowling and predatory aunt in the next room; but no young man will listen to his warnings or accept his opinions of the true uses of gas. This is but one of a thousand instances in which the old are wiser than the young.

In estimating the value of the repairs and alterations which art puts upon aged man, there is an irreconcilable difference of opinion between the old and the young. There is Mr. Babbitt, of Barrington, Maine, who has reached the ripe wisdom of sixty-three years. That wise old man maintains that neither hair, teeth, nor limbs ought to be permanent fixtures. Mr. Babbitt wears a wig, a complete set of false teeth, and a cork leg, and instead of trying to deny their artificiality, he constantly testifies to their superiority to the hair, teeth and legs with which he was originally fitted out. In not weather he sincerely pities the young who cannot take off their hair, when one of his teeth is out of order, he sends the whole set to the dentist by a special messenger, and when they are returned in a perfect state of repair, he triumphantly asks his younger acquaintances who undergo grinding torments in the dentist's chair, if they do not wish that they too had removable teeth. In the mosquito season, when his neighbors have to constantly wear heavy boots to protect their ankles, Mr. Babbitt will take off his cork leg, and placing it on the table, will chuckle as he watches the deceitful mosquitoes swarming upon it, and neglecting all other legs to pray upon that fair, false calf. Mr. Babbitt even pities other elderly men who wear their own hair in a gray or white condition, and insists that his raven locks are far more beautiful than any natural hair.
Altogether, he is as frank and cheerful as he is wise, and his only fault—if he has one—is the tendency to forget his hair and to leave it lying about in inappropriate places.

It was through this inexcusable forgetfulness that Mr. Babbitt became the cause of the tragedy in the Bangor and Boston sleeping-car last April, the mere recollection of which causes the average Barrington citizen to turn pale and shudder.
The sleeping-car was full, and stove was, of course, extremely hot, although it was a warm night. Mr. Babbitt had noticed among his fellow-passengers a lady of indefinite age, but of much personal beauty. Her hair was especially ravishing. It was of a golden yellow, banked in front, scooped on the edges, and heaped up on the top of her head in gr-at four-ply braids fastened together by gilt safety pins with large back beads, and sprinkled with flowers and ribbons. In fact, it was simply gorgeous, and for once Mr. Babbitt began to doubt whether Nature could not, when she gave her whole mind to it, manufacture hair superior to that of the best wig-maker.

The golden-haired lady occupied berth No. 25, and Mr. Babbitt felt a vague and unreasonable pleasure when he remembered that her berth was No. 25. In course of time beds were made and the passengers withdrew to their coaches to sleep, perchance to snore. Mr. Babbitt, as usual, took off his hair and laid it by the side of his pillow, but, with a view to possible railway accidents, thought it best to keep his teeth and leg at their respective posts of duty. The heat and the noise made it impossible for him to sleep, so that, just before daylight arrived, he arose and went to the rear platform in search of air. When he had nearly reached the door, he remembered that he had forgotten his hair, so he went back to his berth, and, putting his hand under the curtain, grasped his wig, adjusted it carefully, and went out of the door.

One by one the passengers woke up and climbed out of their berths. The cars were due at Boston at seven a. m., and a little before that hour Mr. Babbitt re-entered the car. He had scarcely closed the door behind him when an infuriated lady in a badly-fitting black masculine wig rushed at him and denounced him as a heartless villain and an atrocious thief.
His astonishment was naturally very great, but with much dignity he pushed on, intending to enter the next car and so escape the supposed lunatic. The enthusiasm of the other passengers, which immediately manifested itself in cheers, and efforts to lie down in strong laughter, convinced him that something was the matter. A casual glance in the mirror apprised him that he was wearing the yellow hair that he had so much admired the previous evening. His apologies and explanations were not accepted by the angry lady, but a committee of passengers finally arranged a compromise, in accordance with which Mr.

Babbitt and the lady concealed themselves behind the curtains of contiguous berths, while the committee effected an exchange of hair. It was certainly a very terrible affair, but it effectually warns Mr. Babbitt to never leave his hair on his pillow or anywhere else except on his head, it will prove a blessing disguise.

THE PLAINS A HARD ROAD TO TRAVEL.—
About the middle of June, 1877, Dr.
William Kemp started from Kookuk, Iowa, with his family, consisting of his wife and three children, in a two-horse wagon, for the purpose of going to his father who was living in Oregon. Mr.
Kemp succeeded in reaching the Black Hills in safety. There unfortunately, his horses were poisoned by drinking alkali water. This misfortune left him teamless and with out means to purchase a span of horses. He was compelled to dispose of his wagon and remain during the winter in the Black Hills country, and had to work very hard to maintain himself and family. In the spring he started west, and managed to work his way as far as Ogden with a freight team.
On arriving there he was again stranded, and unable to proceed further. But his pluck never once deserted him. While there he formed the determination to come on foot the remainder of the distance. Not having the means to purchase any sort of a vehicle, Mr. Kemp constructed a large wheelbarrow entirely from willows. Into this he bundled what few worldly goods he possessed, and accompanied by his faithful wife and children, he again turned his face toward the setting sun. The wife and children trundled the wheelbarrow and father proceeding a considerable distance the barrow broke down, but Kemp rebuilt the rude vehicle as best he could, and once more resumed the long and painful journey, traveling by day and camping at night, these people at length made their way to the base of the Blue Mountains.
Here the family fortunately fell in with some freight teams, and were kindly assisted to Umatilla. They reached the Blue Mountain about the 20th of May.
On arriving at Umatilla the O. S. N. Co.
Company, when they learned of the circumstances, brought Mr. Kemp and his family down to Portland free. They reached this city on the 30th of last month.—[Portland Oregonian, June 13th.]

SILVER DEPOSITS PERMANENT.—In his treatise on silver mines Fuller says:
"Whenever in any part of the world silver mines have been worked, they are worked now, unless from war, invasions of Indians, etc. We know of no silver mining regions in the world that have given out. Mexican mines worked by the Aztecs before the conquest by Cortez are still worked as profitable as ever; the old Spanish mines opened long before Hannibal's time, are still worked with enormous profits; the South American mines have constantly yielded their wealth for more than three hundred years, and are as productive as ever; mines in Hungary that were worked by the Romans before the Saviour's time, still yield abundance of ore; the silver mines of Freiberg, opened in the eleventh century and worked continuously ever since, yield their steady increase. So in Norway, Sweden and Russia, and indeed wherever silver mines have been opened, we believe without exception, they continue to be worked at the present day, and generally are more productive than at any time in their past history."

Mrs. Maud Giles, step-daughter of the deceased locationist Bellew, last night accomplished in Cooper Institute the wonderful feat of singing three hours and eight minutes without intermission.
During that time she sang 40 different well-known selections, and in six different languages. She began to tire standing after singing for two hours and a quarter, although her voice betrayed but very slight symptoms of weariness, and she rested in an easy chair at intervals thereafter, while changing the sheets of music. She was frequently applauded during the evening, and at the close of a very fine rendition of a grand aria from Weber's "Der Freischuetz," the last composition on the programme, was the recipient of quite an ovation. It is interesting to note, apropos of the performance, that Mrs. Giles claims that she can sing twice as long as she did last evening. Her husband remarked as she was singing the last selection, that "she could sing until morning were sufficient inducement offered."

Detective Jehu, who has been making enquiries into the cause of the death of the late Paul J. Kedroviansky, the arch-priest of the Greek Church in San Francisco, reported to have been murdered, reports that he has found several persons who saw the deceased fall on the sidewalk at the corner of Spring and California streets, a few moments before he was discovered by the arresting officer.
It is deemed certain that his death was caused by the injuries received in the fall.

HOW IOWA BECAME A TERRITORY.

Ever since the world began woman has played a leading part in all history events. American history is no exception to the rule. The honors which fall to Mollie Stark, Aunt Bailey and numerous other women are well known.
Latter on it is recorded that the Quakeress, Rebecca Wright, helped gallant Phil Sberidan, to win the day at Winchester.
Woman has been the central figure in poetry and song for ages, and moulded with her deft finger kingdoms and crowns, and unmake them as well. She has been an important factor in the legislation of the country, and to the wives of a woman is ascribed the existence of Iowa. The bill for the formation of the territory of Iowa was prepared and presented to Congress by George W.
Jones. Among its most bitter opponents was John C. Calhoun, then in the zenith of his power, and the master mind of Congress. It soon became apparent to Mr. Jones that Calhoun would crush his bill and he therefore resorted to strategy. Mr. Jones was then in his prime and a man of attractive presence, added to which were graces of manner, which gave him great prominence in society. He was a great favorite with the ladies. There was at Washington a lady who was a special friend of Mr.
Calhoun—in fact, she had him "on a string," as it were. He at once played the agreeable to the lady, and soon, by his gallantry, won from her the expression one day that she hoped something might happen that she could reciprocate his favors. That was Jones' opportunity. He informed her she could and how. He explained to her his territorial bill, and how anxious he was to succeed with it, but he feared the opposition of Calhoun, who would kill it if he had the opportunity. The woman entered into the matter with zest, and told Mr. Jones to send her his card when his bill came up, and she would take care of Mr. Calhoun. When the bill was taken up Mr.
Jones sent his card to the lady in the gallery. Soon after Mr. Calhoun was sent going out of the hall, and did not return for several hours. In the meantime Mr. Jones had secured the passage of his bill. Mr. Calhoun never knew why his fair friend was so especially anxious to secure his undivided attention on that day. Thus was Iowa born of woman.—[Chicago Journal.]

Young man, if she flutters out to meet you at the gate with a new cordiality if she remarks that "eleven o'clock isn't a bit late"—if she invites you to call again in confidential earnest—if she says "good night" with a gentle pressure of her dear little hand—if she does all these things, young man, be not deceived.
The strawberry and ice cream season is here.—[Boston Courier.]

"I suppose you have been to your lodge," she scornfully inquired when she opened the door on him at midnight.
"No, no my dear," Blinks replied with gushing candor, "you see I stopped at a strawberry tea on my way home—an the berries saured on my stomach.
Confound strawberry festivals anyway s'rlly in the season; last one'll take me in."
